
Safetell Cash Recycler

Tested at the Bank of England

The Safetell Cash Recycler has recently participated in the Framework for the Testing of Automatic Banknote Handling Machines at the Bank of England, and successfully passed the counterfeit test by identifying and rejecting all fraudulent banknotes in the test sample, made up of the latest counterfeit notes removed from circulation.

Accurate and reliable banknote authentication is a key feature of the Safetell Cash Recycler that uses multiple checks to detect counterfeit notes while the customer is present.

Performing exceptionally well during testing Safetell's Cash Recycler picked out all fraudulent notes of all types from the simple to very complex counterfeit banknotes.

The Safetell Cash Recycler automatically counts, validates, and deposits 5-7 banknotes per second; separating counterfeit notes for cashier attention, while depositing into the safe area all genuine banknotes.

Its automatic deposit and dispensing of banknotes is designed to reduce cashier error, while freeing cashiers to focus on cross selling of higher value financial products, or to accelerate the flow of customers served. Continuous real time balances, reduce time and cost spent on end of day balance reconciliation.

Available to UL291 or CEN Grade III the Safetell Cash Recycler offers secure storage of cash in open plan banking environments or agency positions, with the benefits this can bring for an organization. Secure storage available in the product reduces the need to access the main safe and the need to transfer cash to cashier positions, increasing security and cashier efficiency.

With a small footprint, size, and a range of steel plinths the Safetell Cash Recycler reduces the likelihood of changes in the cashier area, and can be securely positioned for the ergonomic requirements of seated or standing cashiers.

The Safetell Cash Recycler can either be used stand alone or integrated into banking systems.
