

Cash-In-Transit & ATM Protection

Degrading stolen cash within seconds

It was announced today, 5th May 2010, that Safetell Limited has purchased ATM Protection Limited.

Safetell is a long term designer, manufacturer, and installer of commercial security products, with 20 years experience supplying security equipment to banks, building societies, and retail finance clients, among others.

ATM Protection is an innovative designer of specialist security equipment specifically devised to thwart Cash-In-Transit and ATM attacks.

Safetell, who entered the U.K. market providing Fast Rising Screens for building societies to prevent armed robberies, has continually expanded its product and service portfolio to reflect the needs of its clients; now supplying a whole raft of security solutions encompassing secure line products, cash management equipment, specialist CCTV, and access control products and services.

The board of Safetell, aware of security issues in the CIT and ATM market, have been assessing differing solutions for some time eventually electing to purchase ATM Protection because of the excellent solution it offers.

ATM Protection, with years of experience in the U.K. CIT industry, has designed and developed an exceptional CIT protection system that degrades stolen cash within seconds, depriving criminals of any reward in attacking Cash-In-Transit deliveries, at banks or ATMs, to reduce financial losses.

The system combines many subtle design features that come together to comprehensively degrade, track, and recover banknotes.

Features of the ATM Protection system enable the value of degraded banknotes to be reclaimed by official system users from the Bank of England, while rendering them useless for transactions with the public or note changing machines.

Combining ATM Protection's product and knowledge with Safetell's existing high quality support structure further reinforces the strength of the solution for its users.
